MUSIC FACULTY CONCERT AT UNIVERSITY OF LOWELL

LOWELL, MASS. - A concert of Baroque and modern music by faculty performers is planned at the University of Lowell, Wednesday, February 28, at 8:00 PM. The program, featuring Susan Fleet playing trumpet, and Donald Bravo on bassoon, is in the recital hall of Durgin Performing Arts Center, located at Pawtucket and Wilder Streets, Lowell. The concert is free and open to the public.

Susan Fleet, a faculty member in Lowell's College of Music, teaches trumpet and performs with the campus Faculty Brass Quintet. She has given numerous solo recitals in this region, and is on the faculties of Brown University and Barrington College. Additionally, Susan Fleet performs as principal trumpet with the Rhode Island Opera-Ballet Orchestra.

Donald Bravo heads the woodwind area in the College of Music at the University of Lowell. His extensive experience includes performances with the Boston Symphony Orchestra, the Buffalo Philharmonic, and the Montreal Symphony.

Assisting on the program will be fellow faculty members, Natalo Paella, Jacqueline Gourdin, and Dr. John Ogasapian, playing trumpet, piano, and organ respectively.

For information contact the College of Music at 452-5000, campus extension 250.
